Dear congress participant,

Welcome to Lisbon 2011!

As I write this introduction, news reports from Japan are coming through, telling us about the earthquake and tsunami, and now, too, the threat of nuclear disaster. It is hard to witness the suffering of those who have lost their loved ones, their homes and all their possessions. Our hearts and minds reach out to our colleagues in Japan whom we know from conferences and collaborations.

Help and support is needed for those whose suffering is felt acutely in Japan after these catastrophes. However, our job as providers of palliative care is somewhat different: we have to relieve the chronic suffering that goes with life-threatening illnesses, and provide continuous care for patients and caregivers. This ongoing suffering may be less visible than the devastating events depicted in the news, but patients and families need help and support as well.

To provide optimal care for all terminally ill patients, we need to develop and implement palliative care; this requires research and education. In correspondence with this requirement, the EAPC has recently reformulated its mission statement; it now reads, 'The EAPC brings together many voices to forge a vision of excellence in palliative care that meets the needs of patients and their families'.

The EAPC congresses are a major instrument in helping to achieve this goal. They are acknowledged as platforms for the exchange of new information, the discussion of new research results, and the provision of up-to-date education and training. We are looking forward to an exciting congress in Lisbon, meeting colleagues from all over Europe, and from other regions of the world.

We have come a long way since the initiation of modern palliative care by Dame Cicely Saunders in 1967 at St Christopher's Hospice. In some countries, the provision of palliative care is approaching full coverage of the population, and many countries are directing their efforts into integrating palliative care into the healthcare system. However, different countries use different services and models of organization, and striking the balance between palliative care as a specialist field, and as a public health approach, seems to have proved challenging.

We should also realise that palliative care is not established in all of Europe, and we have to reach out to those countries that have not advanced as far in this journey. The EAPC provides expert information and guidance on a wide range of palliative care topics, from symptom treatment to organisation of care. The EAPC White Paper on standards and norms may be used as a model to develop national strategies or guidelines.

However, the exchange of information and experience is never a one-way street. The pace of development in some countries has been quite astonishing, and I have found more than once that I have learnt much from the new and speedy advancements in these places. Following the political changes of the last few decades – which have opened opportunities for palliative care pioneers in these countries – profound changes have been made to the healthcare systems of some eastern European countries. This has had the result that major advancements, such as legislative changes and implementation of national strategies, have been achieved. The recent report on palliative care to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe¹ has identified centres of excellence in Poland, Russia, Hungary and Romania that set examples for western as well as central and eastern Europe. As palliative care is developed in more and more European countries, we want to reach out to all new national associations and invite them to join the EAPC as collective members, so that they might benefit from the exchange of ideas with other members and participate in the development of a European palliative care culture. The Lisbon Congress will offer an overview of the work of the EAPC and its members and the opportunities they have created.

In addition to the collaboration between various European countries, the EAPC also wants to reach out to other continents. In particular, it would like to offer the opportunity of collaboration to countries across the Mediterranean, northern Africa and the Middle East. The Congress programme includes contributions from the aforementioned countries as a first step towards this collaboration. This is done in close liaison with the African Palliative Care Association.

The Portuguese language spoken by our hosts in Lisbon also facilitates a link across the Atlantic to Brazil. Close links exist between Latin American and Portuguese palliative care professionals, and this is mirrored by the Congress programme – for example, there is a joint workshop in the Portuguese language.

Reaching out to these colleagues and collaborators working in different cultures and settings, we expect rich discussions and an abundant exchange of ideas. The congress programme encompasses a wide range of topics, covering all areas of palliative care. Plenary lectures are on pain management, spiritual care and the philosophy of palliative care, but the public health approach is also covered, along with palliative care as a task for society. Other plenaries include examples from Romania and South Africa, as well as an international perspective on palliative care in Europe. There is a rich selection of symposia to cater for all tastes and needs, including smaller sessions in the morning to meet experts for direct discussions – not to forget the oral presentations and the poster exhibition area, where so many of the participants contribute their personal research results and experiences.

One of the highlights will be a report from the pioneer days of palliative care, delivered by the winner of the Floriani Award, Mary Baines. This will close the circle from palliative care in its first inception to today's state-of-the-art services. I hope that it will also allow us to reach out towards tomorrow's palliative care as an integral part of healthcare for every patient who needs it!

Acknowledgements:

I want to thank the members of the scientific committee, the advisory board and the organizing committee as well as the reviewers for their contribution and commitment, as the congress would not have been possible without their help. Special thanks belong to Heidi Blumhuber and Amelia Giordano in the EAPC Headoffice in Milano, and I am sincerely grateful to the congress officer Farina Hodiamont, who kept together all the strings and wove them into a congress.

GREETING FROM THE ORGANISING COMMITTEE

Dear Colleagues, Dear Friends,

It is with huge pleasure that we welcome you to this 12th Congress of the European Association for Palliative Care and to our city of Lisbon.

It is for us an honor and a privilege to host this congress. We look forward to meet so many colleagues from all over Europe and from other continents, among them the most renowned experts in palliative care from all over the world. We enthusiastically look forward to present to you a high quality congress, offering cross-cutting themes which will provide areas of interest for every participant.

The motto of this EAPC congress is “Reaching Out”, and this meets with our aspiration to do our best, to build bridges towards our colleagues, to go that extra mile, just like the Portuguese sailors did in the XV century. “Reaching out” also serves as an appeal to every participant to be active in the manifold sessions of the programme. The result of the congress will be what we all make of it, with lectures, posters, free communications and discussions. We hope that you will take this chance to bond with colleagues of other cultures and nationalities, and to strengthen your commitment for Palliative Care.

Our city, one of ancient and strong cultural, gastronomic and artistic traditions, welcomes you with kindness and hospitality, offering countless opportunities for leisure and also offering its incomparable beauty and light. We hope your stay will be a memorable one.

We would like to thank the European Association of Palliative Care for their trust and support, particularly the President Lukas Radbruch. We would also like to say a big “thank you” to the EAPC team, the Ad Médic team, the members of the scientific and the organizing committees, the speakers, and all those others who made this event possible. We were happy to be part of such a large team.

Hopefully this congress will provide for many, if not for every participants a turning point toward better palliative care. We should not forget that the patients are the main reason for this EAPC congress, and what we do should result in more and better palliative care for them. In addition, let us spend some quality time together, and translate this into cheerful and intense memories that will persist in all our memories! Welcome!
